Let's just get this out of the way: You already knew conservatives weren't funny for obvious, common-sense reasons. There's been research done on the subject, and it all concludes that outside of inventing reasons to kill the poor, conservatives aren't creative. For instance, you might have seen a "well, technically" nerd hold up a mug of leftist tears after something bad happens in the world.

One problem with history is that we tend to view everyone through a modern lens. Thus, the "good guys" surely held all of our modern progressive views. (The Spartans in 300 were all about freedom and democracy, right?) The reality, of course, is that every real hero had an ugly side, one which was either overshadowed by their heroism or was simply consistent with the general ugliness of the era.

Prepositions in German: Prepositions work in much the same way in German, except for the added complication that the nouns and pronouns that they govern are declined, depending on whether they are in the accusative, dative, or genitive cases. The choice of case is determined by several different factors.

Leo Major was a French Canadian man born in 1921. He probably didn't think he was going to be more of a hero than the average soldier when he joined up with the Canadian Army at the start of World War II—supposedly he simply joined up because he wanted to show his father, with whom he had a shaky relationship, that he could do something to be proud of.
