These Old Shades has been a difficult listen. Perhaps it is because my own imagination has developed a strong vocal idea of what certain characters should sound like. So I found myself gritting my teeth to get through this audio. As an example, the main character Justin is shrill, grating, and very "old" sounding.

These Old Shades remains my favorite Heyer with Devil's Cub a close second. I know Shades is class-conscious to an alarming degree and I know Leonie is very young, but there is just something about how Avon's character is drawn and how he is illuminated not by what he says of himself, but by what those closest to him say of him and his behaviors or how they react to him.
